Breaking the Code

When walking around school this week I have noticed that lots of the children have been busy coding in a whole variety of ways. Year 1 and 2 have been turned into robots and their friends have 'programmed' them to get around of series of obstacles. Year 3 have been using Scratch to make characters move around a setting, Year 4 have been using Logo to draw shapes and write on the screen and I had to judge a Year 5 dance competition where they had programmed a device to spin in different directions and lights to flash and change colour. It has all been excellent and I am always amazed at how quickly the children pick up these new skills. Thank you to all the staff for making the lessons so engaging and fun and well done to the children for their hard work. I am really looking forward to what they get up to next! Have a great weekend and we'll see you on Monday.

Encourage, Support and Guide

Next Friday (2nd February) is NSPCC's fundraising event called Numbers Day. To mark this day children can come in to school in their own clothes (they can be number themed or not), we are going to do some fun, practical maths activities and we've also got the police to come in and do different workshops with each class ranging from 'What do the Police do?' to how to be safe on social media and whilst gaming. If you would like to bring in a donation to help the NSPCC fund their work we would be very grateful.
